Dear Sirs:

I am amore than a little tired of the antics that have been going on regarding the Microsoft litigation. I doubt the suit brought against them has saved me a dime on software. I know it has cost me about $70,000 in the price of my Microsoft stock. I am 72 yeas old and I do not need that kind of help. I have been using computers since the TI 44A was considered the latest deck top PC for the home. I have never had to buy anything I did not wish to nor been stopped from buying what I wanted because of Microsoft's marketing. I have tried other operating systems and found them lacking in what I wanted to do. I have since come back to Microsoft because for me they have a better system. Never because I was forced.

I use AOL as a Internet because I have liked it. If I change it will be because I try something else and like it better.

As I see it the people who brought the suit, did it for there own monitory gain and not for the benefit of the public consumer.

It is about time this suit is brought to a close so that things can get back to normal.

Of course the lawyers would like to drag it on for ever. That is how they get there pockets full.
